around would five pull read work gave those

On the playground, there was a bright red slide where all the second graders loved to play. Yesterday, the kids found a treasure box hidden around the back of the slide. They would have opened it, but it was locked!

The kids all looked around the playground for a key. Lucie was the first to spot it hanging under a swing. She pulled it down and ran back to the box. Her friends crowded around her as they waited to see if it would open.

The key turned with a click, and the box swung open. Inside was a treasure map. The map had a note that read, "Five steps from the swings, buried under a giant rock, awaits a surprise!"

Excited, the children worked together to find the spot. They dug gently with their hands until they found a small box. They pulled it out of the ground.

The box had a note on the outside that said: "I gave you the first treasure box to see if you could work together to find the real treasure. You did it!"

When they opened the box, they found shiny rocks and gems. Those were the treasures they had worked so hard to find! They were beautiful! As they held the treasure in their hands, they thought, "Will we ever find out who did this for us?"
